Excerpt from Sermons: Preached in Rugby School Chapel in 1862-1867 I do not wish to make more of the unhappiness of dying suddenly in the act of disobeying some lawful human authority than every man s conscience would make of it. Nothing, for instance, would seem to me more mistaken than to talk as if God s judgment on any man who died suddenly would depend on the accident of what the man might be doing at the moment of death. No man, I think, who had any religious feeling at all would not feel great pain at the idea of dying in the act of doing something wrong, even the very slightest wrong. But that is very different indeed from saying that the decision of God s justice is to be turned this way or that by what as far as the man is concerned is a mere chance. Still further, I should never for a moment wish to put disobedience to human authority on a level with disobedience to the Bible or disobedience to conscience. It is very wrong to, disobey parents; but there are worse wrongs than that. And though we in this place have authority given us by the parents of our scholars, I do not say that disobedience to a master is as bad as disobedience to a father. The distinction is made for us by our own consciences, and I do not wish to obliterate that distinction. Disobedience to orders here is not like lying, is not like swearing, is not like impurity. Disobedience to our orders does not stain and degrade the character. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare...
