Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO reviewed the criteria and methodology which the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) used in its 1981 and 1982 evaluation of Professional Standards Review Organizations (PSRO). PSROs are the organizations primarily responsible for assuring that inpatient hospital services are medically necessary, appropriate, and of acceptable quality. GAO was asked to determine: (1) what basis there was for the differences between the 1981 and 1982 evaluation criteria and methodology; (2) why there were dramatic changes in the relative rankings of several PSROs; (3) whether quarterly assessments adversely influence the HCFA capability to measure the relative performance of PSROs; and (4) whether HCFA assessments provide a sound basis for terminating PSRO funding for ineffectiveness. GAO found that: (1) evidence indicates that the 1982 evaluation criteria and scoring levels were revised with the objective of terminating a specific number of PSROs during fiscal year 1982 to conform to proposed 1983 budget limitations; (2) the HCFA 1982 criteria for assessing PSRO impact on improving quality of care are more definitive, objective, and difficult to meet than 1981 criteria; (3) PSROs...
